

The phrase "no blood no bone" can be translated into Japanese as:

"Chi mo hone mo nai"

- Chi = blood
- Hone = bone
- Mo nai = not exist / none

So the full romaji version is:

Chi mo hone mo nai ✓

If you want, I can also give a slightly more natural-sounding Japanese version that still keeps the same stark meaning. Do you want me to do that?

Perfect! Here are a few edgy, ultra-compact Japanese/romaji variants of "no blood, no bone" that could work as a tattoo or slogan:

1. Chi nashi, hone nashi – literally "no blood, no bone," clean, minimal, and dramatic.
2. Chinashi-Honeshi – fused into one stylized phrase, very tattoo-like, stark.
3. Chihone Zero – mixing Japanese + English for a modern, edgy feel ("blood bone zero").
4. Chi to Hone naki – slightly more literary; "blood and bone absent," sharp and poetic.
5. Chi/Hone Nashi – slashed format, gives a brutal, almost logo-like vibe.

If you want, I can sketch a version that's visually edgy for a tattoo or design, showing how the kanji or romaji could be styled for maximum impact. This could make it feel really "hardcore."

Do you want me to do that?

血なし

骨なし

CHINASHI,
HONESHI